QUESTION 1

Website Title

We are selecting a title for the combined website. The title should communicate that this resource is for everyone — clinicians, caregivers, and self-advocates — and that understanding the brain is the starting point for effective mental health support. Please rank your preference (1 = top choice, 4 = least preferred) or note any reactions:

QUESTION 2

Home Page Overview Paragraph

The overview paragraph is the first thing visitors read after the title. It explains why the site exists and who built it. Please rank your preference:

Option A

This site was built by therapists, caregivers, and self-advocates who saw the same problem from different sides. Therapists felt unequipped to help their most complex clients. Caregivers felt like no one understood their child. Self-advocates felt like the system was not built for them. We came together because we recognized a fundamental mismatch between how mental health treatment is delivered and how the brain actually works. This site is the result. Here you will find the framework, tools, and resources to bridge that gap, whether you are a clinician looking to better serve your clients, a caregiver searching for answers, or a self-advocate learning to navigate a system that was not designed with your brain in mind.

Option B

We are therapists, caregivers, and self-advocates who came together around a shared realization: the mental health system was not working for the people who needed it most. Therapists felt stuck, unsure why their training was not reaching certain clients. Caregivers watched their children cycle through treatments that did not fit. Self-advocates struggled in silence, told to try harder in a system that never asked how their brain worked. There is a better way. When we start with the brain, everything changes. This site gives you the framework and tools to find the right support and to provide support in a way that actually works.

Option C

This site exists because therapists, caregivers, and self-advocates all recognized the same problem. Therapists felt unequipped. Families felt unheard. Self-advocates felt unseen. The common thread was a mental health system built around typical brain functioning, leaving everyone struggling when the brain works differently. We came together to change that. Here you will find the tools and framework to close that gap, so clinicians can provide care that fits, caregivers can find answers that work, and self-advocates can get the support they deserve.

Home Page Content & Layout

Please review the Home Page and share your thoughts on the following:

How is the organization of the content?

Should some sections go ahead of other sections?

Are there some sections that are not needed?

Do the subtitles make sense for what we want to communicate?

How is the wording? Any changes? Is it too wordy?

Thank you for your feedback!
